

As co-chair of the bipartisan Iran Study Group in the House, I am working to educate my colleagues on the threat to global security posed by the Iranian nuclear program. Today we heard from Assistant Secretary of State for Arms Control Stephen Rademaker to update us on the latest negotiations between Iran and our European allies. The most important developments came last weekend when the governing board of the International Atomic Energy Agency voted to press Iran for more disclosure on its nuclear activity or else face referral to the UN Security Council. I applaud India for standing with the U.S. in voting for the resolution and demonstrating strong international leadership.
